Tribal Spotlight

Many Native American tribes used various plants for healing and cleansing the body. One of the various plants used was coffee. This was not a native plant to the Quapaw people. It was introduced to the tribe by Europeans.

The word Ma-Kó-Sha translates to dark medicine. In our language if there was not a word for a specific thing, we used words to describe what it did. In this case, because it was not native to where we lived, we described what it looked like and how it affected the body. It helped keep us alert as well as a cleanser of the body.

When Downstream added the new edition, it was suggested to incorporate a coffee shop. We all need a "pick me up" in the morning! Just like there are various uses for coffee, we offer a variety of choices for our guests. Please come and enjoy some Ma-Kó-Sha with the O-Gah-Pah people.
